National law firm Browne Jacobson has been announced as a partner of Insurtech UK, an alliance of over 50 InsurTech startups, together with traditional insurers and other partners.

Insurtech UK, which launched in November 2018, has also recruited CII, Aviva and Broker Direct PLC in this second wave of partners and associate members. The alliance aims to be the leading voice of the UK's rapidly-growing InsurTech community.

The alliance provides its startup members with valuable collaboration opportunities and offers a forum where industry insights, expertise and best practices can be shared so that members can deal with the many challenges they may face when launching out into the UK insurance market and achieve greater customer outcomes.

Browne Jacobson's corporate technology partner Jon Snade and senior associate Charlotte Gregory, who are both based in the firm's London office, will work closely with other members to support Insurtech UK's objectives and initiatives.

Jon Snade commented:

"I am delighted and proud that Browne Jacobson has joined Insurtech UK as a partner. We already work with a large number of Insurtech companies and traditional insurers and we are looking forward to supporting the further growth and success of Insurtech UK and its members.

Charlotte Gregory added:

"Our firm's expertise combines specialist insurance advice with technology insights, so it is fantastic to be able to capitalise on those strengths and further share our experiences to help shape the future of the exciting InsurTech market."
