

Legal challenges in workplace inclusion: A Scottish tribunal's examination of transgender rights

26 February 2025  Georgia Kingsnorth

An ongoing Scottish employment tribunal case involving an NHS Nurse and an NHS Doctor, has sparked debate over workplace rights, ideological belief, and single sex spaces.

The dispute began when a Nurse encountered a transgender female Doctor in the staff changing room. The Nurse expressed discomfort at the presence of the Doctor which led to a confrontation. The Doctor made a formal complaint about the encounter and the Nurse was subsequently suspended from her role. As a result, the Nurse filed an Employment Tribunal claim against NHS Fife, her employer, and the Doctor. The Nurse has alleged that being forced to share a changing room with a transgender woman amounts to unlawful harassment.

The case was being heard at Employment Tribunal in Scotland and was expected to conclude after 10 days. However, with further evidence still to be heard, it has been adjourned until July 2025. The case raises significant legal and ethical questions about balancing transgender inclusion, against the rights of other employees.

This matter highlights the growing challenges faced by employers in navigating complex issues regarding gender, political and ideological beliefs within workplace policies and discrimination law. As the proceedings continue, the outcome could set an important precedent for future disputes involving transgender rights and workplace policies, and although the outcome will not be binding in England, the outcome can be considered persuasive by English and Welsh Employment Tribunals when considering claims with similar facts.

As this case illustrates, navigating the complexities of workplace inclusion and discrimination law requires not only a deep understanding of legal requirements but also a sensitive approach to diverse employee needs. At Browne Jacobson LLP, our Employment Team is equipped with the expertise and experience to guide employers through these challenging issues.

We offer comprehensive services including reviewing existing policies, drafting new policies that comply with the latest legal standards, and providing bespoke training sessions to ensure that all levels of your organisation understand and implement best practices in workplace inclusion effectively.

If you find yourself facing similar challenges or if you are seeking to proactively address potential issues before they arise, do not hesitate to reach out. The Employment Team at Browne Jacobson LLP are here to assist you, ensuring that your policies are not only legally compliant but also aligned with your organisation's values and goals.

Key contact

Georgia Kingsnorth
Associate

Georgia.Kingsnorth@brownejacobson.com

+44 (0)330 045 2644

Related expertise

Services

Employment

Employment services for healthcare

Health and safety

Health and social care disputes

Health law

Medical treatment decisions and disputes