

New guidance: understanding academy trusts

📅 10 March 2023 👤 Katie Michelin

New guidance is published this week to provide information about what it means to become an academy or to join a trust.

Developed jointly by Browne Jacobson and the NAHT the guidance, entitled 'Understanding academy trusts', is the first in a suite of documents and discussion tools.

These resources are designed to provide senior leaders, particularly in maintained schools, with factual information about the implications and mechanics of academy status.

The hope is that the new guidance will help anybody involved in conversations around legal and governance structures relating to their school.

Katie Michelin, senior associate said:

"The guide aims to explain the nuts and bolts of what an academy is and how it operates. Despite the large number of academies today, we know from questions asked by our clients, particularly those exploring academy status, that some of the "basics" are still misunderstood.

We hope this document empowers schools as they make decisions about their futures by busting myths and serving as a clear and neutral piece of guidance."
